The Solitary Self

Th us, the whole problem of the meaning of self-interest and self-fulfi lment - and indeed of what selves themselves actually are - has proved to be much more troublesome than it looked in Hobbes's day Attempts to understand selves have long produced an uproar of controversy Like Darwin, we today already know that our motiva-

that Lunenfeld does not seem to understand the motives ...

Later, however, she expiated her sins in a long and self-imposed solitary life in the Transjordanian desert Catherine, on the other hand, was a young and very learned Christian who was martyred for the philosophical defense of her faith She is thus an intellectual saint Through her rhetorical acumen, she converted fifty learned pagan
